Description:

Many post-colonial archives in African nations are fraught with issues of inaccessibility to researchers, erasures (deliberate and non-deliberate), and problems of funding. These problems are more intractable in some countries than in others. In Nigeria during the colonial era, the colonial government documented and preserved its footprint in the country in archives located in Nigeria and the UK. Although these records were not all accessible to the public, as current research on the British government's deliberate concealing or destruction of documents pertaining to various colonies has proven, they have undoubtedly shaped the nature of historical scholarship on Nigeria's colonial era.

In the post-colonial period since the 1960s, Nigeria's national archives have not systematically collated records from Nigeria's various ministries, public and civil services, and other government parastatals. This development has adversely affected scholarship on post-independence Nigeria and exacerbated the problem of access and erasures. It has created an atmosphere in which the Nigerian government, for reasons of funds, self-interest, self-preservation, or ignorance, fails to see the need for the centralized maintenance of records and its impact on nation building.

Over the decades since independence, this deprioritization of archives and record-keeping has created a cascading effect on the efficiency of Nigerian archives and their colonial-era collections. Government funding for this sector, its staff, and the proper preservation of files remains abject, which further culminates into uneven, unequal, unreliable, and inconsistent experiences by researchers who seek to use the archives' collections.

The Goal

This conference seeks to bring together various stakeholders from the academia, educational institutions, Nigerian archives, government ministries, and the public to discuss conditions in the archives, how these conditions shape research experience and outcome, and ways that the archives can be built into a vibrant arm of scholarship and nation building in Nigeria.

The Questions

We reflect on multiple questions: How do scholars navigate the problems of researching Nigeria's history in Nigeria? In cases where records of government parastatals are not centrally located, how do researchers proceed? How do the archives influence research experience and outcome? Since identity politics (religious, economic, national, international, etc) play a crucial role in navigating Nigeria and its archives, how do the experiences of students and researchers in Nigeria and that of their Nigerian counterparts from the diaspora (or other international visitors) differ? How can scholars who study Nigeria proactively forge partnerships with archives, archive staff, and other supportive organizations to promote sustainability in Nigerian archives? Are there successful case studies that can be drawn from? How do the experiences of visitors in Nigerian archives compare to their experiences in archives elsewhere in the world? How can the academic unit create awareness at the government level about the need for systematic accessioning of records? How can we preserve other sources of African history that emanate from oral histories and personal records? What lessons can be learned? What action plans can be taken?

We invite you to submit abstracts for individual papers, panel proposals, and roundtable proposals to conference@ahrdc.academy and navigatingarchives.ahrdc@gmail.com. Abstracts should be no more than 250 words and submitted by August 31, 2022. Panel proposals should consist of 3-5 panelists and include a title and brief description of the panel as well as abstracts of all proposed papers in the panel. Proposals for roundtables should assume the same format as panel proposals. The abstract for each roundtable participant should have a title and a brief description of the participant's contribution to the roundtable. Accepted proposals will be notified by October 15, 2022.

Conference registration fee is 10,000 NGN for all participants in Nigeria and $50 for non-Nigerian participants.
