Bioethics Education International (BEI) invites worldwide students and professionals to attend the 2022 Bioethics Summer School Online "Bioethics, Wars and Pandemics," which will take place July 18-23, 2022.

The COVID-19 pandemic as well as the conflicts around the world including the most recent one in Ukraine, have highlighted the importance and relevance of bioethics education in addressing some urgent issues including:

- a) wartime bioethics, military necessity & International Humanitarian Law
- b) resource allocation
- c) appropriate policy and legislation regarding public health
- d) ethical guidelines for clinical and research decision-making
- e) disparities in health and systemic racism

The program includes guest speakers, lectures and seminars, film screenings, and webinars. The program's faculty is composed of notable scholars from around the world. A list of faculty members can be found here.

This educational program provides participants to familiarize themselves with bioethical issues relevant to military conflicts and pandemics, to gain debating skills, interact with colleagues with a diverse array of cultural and educational backgrounds, and to network with experts in the field.

Bioethics Education International (BEI) offers select partial scholarships to qualifying participants from low-income countries. Graduation certificates will be awarded after completion of the program.

The deadline for partial scholarship applications is June 10, 2022.
