We are pleased to announce the publication of Near Eastern Archaeology 85.4's special issue "The Environment We Share: Human-Nonhuman Animal Interactions in the Ancient Near East" co-guest-edited by Romina Della Casa and Lidar Sapir-Hen: <https://www.journals.uchicago.edu/toc/nea/current>

The studies in this volume explore human-animal interactions by means of faunal remains, iconography, and textual materials from the ancient Near East, opening a space for interdisciplinary collaboration between scholars who explore how ancient societies interacted with their environs, how they experienced and perceived other animals, and how we can grasp a better understanding of the impact other animals had on human societies.
