

Call for Papers: In the Name of God: A Voice for War, a Call for Peace

Announcement published by Serena Bazemore on Monday, January 23, 2023

Type:

Call for Papers

Date:

July 7, 2023

Location:

North Carolina, United States

Subject Fields:

Human Rights, Humanities, Nationalism History / Studies, Peace History / Studies, Religious Studies and Theology

In the Name of God: A Voice for War, a Call for Peace - CFP

Date: July 7-9, 2022

Location: Duke University, Durham, North Carolina, United States.

An interdisciplinary workshop, exploring the role of religion in political and social disputes over war and peace. Workshop is organized by INIRE - the International Network for Interreligious Research and Education: <https://sites.duke.edu/inire/>

Many think of religion as a major cause of global conflicts while others see religion as promoting harmony. Holy texts provide support for both war and peace. In recent decades especially, religion has been viewed as contributing to global strife. The war between Russia and Ukraine has become also a battle between Ukraine's claim for spiritual independence and Russia's vision of salvation for ethnic Russians. In fragile states, such as Myanmar, the Democratic Republic of Congo and Sri Lanka, religious divisions exacerbate strife. Yet, religion has also played a major role in peace-making and conflict resolution.

Our conference will look at the question of religion and conflict. We are cognizant of the gravity of the moment: Religious voices compete in supporting peace and war. Religion is at the heart of political decisions.

The conference is multidisciplinary and interreligious. Among the topics:

- Why and how do religious activists deploy belief to harm and heal?
- Why do so many perpetrators think their actions are just and holy?
- How should religious communities remember their violent past or confront their violent present?
- What, if anything, separates scholars of religious violence from perpetrators?
- Is secularism the solution to religious violence or part of the problem?

- How can religious extremism best be met – religious critique or secular argument?
- Is a commitment to religious pluralism a requirement for a peaceful interpretation of religion?
- How might believers be equipped to respond to religious violence harder?

Possible panels:

- Texts of violence/peace
- Causes of religious violence/religious rescue or pacification
- Holiness and justice in the minds of perpetrators/pacifiers
- Teaching about religion and violence/peace in the classroom
- Critiquing one's own tradition/voice of pluralism in religious traditions
- Characteristics of religious peacemakers

The list is not exclusive. Additions are welcome.

Send title and a short abstract (150 words) by 22/2/2023 to julie.maxwell@duke.edu. Acceptance letters will be sent out by March 7, 2023.

This conference is being cosponsored by Bar-Ilan University (and especially the Judaism and Society Chair), Duke University (the Duke Center for Jewish Studies, Duke Islamic Studies Center, Franklin Humanities Institute, Duke Divinity School, and Religions and Public Life at the Kenan Institute for Ethics).

The Organizing Committee

Contact Info:

Serena Bazemore

Executive Director

Duke Center for Jewish Studies

<https://jewishstudies.duke.edu/>

Contact Email:

serena.elliott@duke.edu

URL:

<https://sites.duke.edu/inire/>