The H-Russia OCR Bookshelf is an archive of hundreds of primary documents that have been scanned with Optical Character Recognition in order to provide searchable, full-text, research resources. All documents in this collection are in the public domain. Special thanks to Greg Afinogenov for contributing these documents to H-Russia to make them accessible and available to scholars in our field and to H-Net home office staff members Hannah Slajus, Erik Rose, and Madeline Saucedo for logistical support in building this archive.

We are also now accepting secondary sources under the conditions that they are able to be distributed under the same Creative Commons License that governs all content posted to the H-Net Commons. Click here to jump to the Secondary Source Collection. If you would like to submit a publication or collection of sources to the OCR Bookshelf, contact the H-Russia editor at editorial-russia@mail.h-net.org
