Announcement published by Alexander Maxwell on Wednesday, February 28, 2018

Type:

Call for Papers

Date:

August 18, 2018

Location:

New Zealand

Subject Fields:

Eastern Europe History / Studies, European History / Studies, Urban History / Studies

Though frequently neglected in European studies, the Balkans, and South-Eastern Europe generally, remains a region of great significance to European history and society. This interdisciplinary workshop seeks to examine urban experiences in this region. How has the political, economic, cultural, national, and religious life of the Balkans been affected by urban environments? Alternatively, how have Balkan cities been shaped by the unique experiences of its peoples? Papers examining any Balkan city are welcome, and comparative papers transcending national borders are particularly welcome. Provisionally confirmed papers will compare Dubrovnik and Vukovar, Budapest and Thessaloniki, and Istanbul and Budapest.

The event will take place 18 August 2018 at the Kelburn Campus of Victoria University, Wellington, New Zealand. The event is free and open to the public. We regret that we have no money to support travel costs. Send 100-word abstracts or queries by 1 August 2018.
