

Maoist Legacy Database digital archive

Discussion published by Aminda Smith on Tuesday, September 18, 2018

We are excited to share the following message from our colleagues at The Maoist Legacy Project - their digital archive is now available! More information in the message below and at <https://maoistlegacy.de/>

The Maoist Legacy Project team is pleased to announce the availability to colleagues of the Maoist Legacy Database, a digital archive that we have been compiling related to project research. The archive currently holds about 3,400 carefully curated items that address various aspects of how the CCP, in the aftermath of Mao's death, dealt with past injustices. Scholarly introductions provide a starting point for exploring various facets of the available materials. Collections and exhibits showcase highlights from the archive. Translations of selected items allow access for non specialist readers. Other features include the ability to transcribe handwritten Chinese documents that have been uploaded, and a resources section that includes our Zhongfa Directory and extensive bibliography. The digital archive is an ongoing project, and we have plans to release additional introductions, exhibits, and items in the coming weeks and months. This initial version is still in beta phase. We welcome feedback from fellow researchers in order to optimize usability and foster collaboration.

Please note that the digital reproductions of the materials in the Maoist Legacy Database are to be used only for research, scholarship, and other non-commercial educational purposes. Every user must agree to these terms and conditions upon registering for the database. We gratefully acknowledge the funding for this project provided by the European Research Council (ERC). For questions and feedback, please contact us at [contact\[at\]maoistlegacy.de](mailto:contact@maoistlegacy.de).