Announcement published by Ellisa Anslow on Monday, September 20, 2021

Type:

Call for Papers

Date:

August 20, 2021 to December 10, 2021

Subject Fields:

Social Sciences, Women's & Gender History / Studies, Humanities, Race / Ethnic Studies, Sexuality Studies

Since the late 1970s and the early 80s, Masculinities Studies, an interdisciplinary subfield of gender studies, has expanded to global proportions bringing novel research and scholarship from social sciences and humanities. The most important research in the field has been predominantly in the Global North, mainly in wealthy and powerful countries such as the USA, UK, Australia and Scandinavian region.

Although Masculinities Studies have also flourished in the Global South, most southern research in this field remains unknown to the rest of the world, mainly due to language barriers, lack of incentive in publications and lack of interaction with scholars and publishers of the Global North. In other words, research and scholarship from the southern hemisphere barely circulate in the Global North; and those that do, are mostly written/interpreted from a northern point of view.

The main objective of this book project is to bring together native/global south authors working in the field of masculinities, with empirical and theoretical research, in the humanities and social sciences. The project will excel in bringing together a varied range of methodologies and theories that express works that open other paradigms beyond the long known and exalted theories of the Global North. Principally, the aim is to create a climate of exchange of knowledge, bringing us closer to research and the creation of new theories from our regions, at present little, or even unknown.

A variety of contributions are important and will render this book more effective. Therefore, practitioners, activists, writers, scholars, graduate students are invited to submit papers.
