CFA: Emanuel Fellowships for Independent and Alt-Academic Scholars

Discussion published by Lawrence Kessler on Friday, February 25, 2022

The Consortium for History of Science, Technology & Medicine is pleased to announce a new fellowship to provide financial support exclusively for research by independent or "alt-academic" scholars.

Emanuel Fellows will be awarded a stipend between $10,000 to $30,000 to be used for research in archives, oral history, or other research methods, travel for research, or time to write up research findings for an article or book. The stipend can also be used as income and salary support to provide time to conduct scholarship. Applicants must have a Ph.D. at the time of application, but may NOT be in a tenured or tenure-track faculty position at a university or college. Scholars are eligible if they are independent or alternative academic scholars, meaning they have positions that do not have research expectations or offer institutional support for research in their area of expertise. They can be adjunct faculty, lecturers (if there is no research expectation), or unaffiliated with an educational institution. Applicants must be permanent residents or citizens of the United States.

Please see the fellowship description and application form for additional information on this and the Consortium's other fellowships. Deadline for applications is April 15.
