New Editors' Introduction

Discussion published by Danielle Kinsey on Tuesday, March 15, 2022

Dear H-Material Culture Members,

I’m delighted to announce that Carly Ciufò and I are starting our new roles as co-Editors-in-Chief at H-Material Culture. My name is Danielle Kinsey and I am an assistant professor in the department of history at Carleton University in Ottawa, Canada. I’m currently working on a book about diamonds and the diamond trade in Britain in the nineteenth century. Carly is a PhD candidate in history at McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario and she’s just completing her dissertation on human rights museums and the people who build them in Canada, the US, and the UK.

Sadly, we take over this post from Gabriele Oropallo who passed away last year, only having had a brief opportunity to helm the network. In the interim, Jennifer Black stepped back into the role she had been doing for about 6 years prior. Thank you, Jennifer, for all your hard work and dedication to the site! We are very grateful for your guidance and support as we get up to speed with how everything works. We are also delighted to have Sam Aylett join us as a new assistant editor and for Colin Fanning to continue his wonderful work as book review editor.

If other members are interested in getting involved with editorial duties or in creating content for the site or if anyone has any ideas about what they’d like to see us do at H-Material Culture, please feel to get in contact with us at editorial-Material-Culture@mail.h-net.org.

Thanks all and best wishes,

Danielle